Respect helps everyone feel welcome, comfortable and safe. Here are a few ways that people show respect at school. Respect is carefully helping another person. There are many ways people in a school help each other. If someone in my school is carrying lots of books, I might be able to help. I could say, "Can I help you carry those books?" Respect is using kind words with a gentle voice, often with a smile, too! When teachers read to children, they use a gentle voice. Many students feel comfortable and safe when their teachers read to them. People keep learning about what respect is as they grow. They learn how respect looks and sounds. They learn how to use respect when working with others. My teachers and principal were children once. They grew up. They have been learning about respect for many, many years. Students usually complain that big dictionaries are too bulky to bring to class, so I recommend that they have two - a pocket dictionary for class and a 'shelf' dictionary for home study. Online dictionaries: Many traditional dictionaries have online editions. Cambridge, for example, have an online advanced learners' dictionary at dictionary.cambridge.org, which is easy to use and provides examples of word use.

There are some excellent and specialized ones, such as etymonline.com, an etymological dictionary (dictionary that explains the origins of words) I sometimes use in class with higher level learners. Their value exists in ease of access to students who own computers, but it is probably also a good idea to direct your learners to traditional ones first.

Electronic dictionaries: A big plus of electronic dictionaries is that they hold a large amount of data in a small space. However, they can be expensive, are attractive to thieves, and they become useless after a few years. The biggest problem exists, paradoxically, in their ease of use. Many students treat them as pocket translators rather than serious tools of study.

I remember one student who electronically translated the whole of his course book into Chinese. His focus on quickly mapping single words to his mother tongue resulted in a load of nonsense! His dictionary was his safety net because it took him back to Chinese at the press of a button. But he didn't progress.

55. Electronic dictionaries may translate your sentence wrongly. True False
56. Some paper dictionaries are too heavy to carry to class. True False
57. Why does the writer mention "etymology.com"?
- a) To say that it is the best dictionary you can use b) To ask the teachers to use it in their own class
- c) To give an example of a specialized dictionary d) To mention he teaches some high-level students
58. The word 'Plus' in paragraph 4 is closest in meaning to _____
- a) goal b) gadget c) benefit d) process
59. The passage provides enough information to answer which of the following questions?
- a) How much are different types of dictionaries? b) Why do some people like to buy all kinds of dictionaries?
- c) What is the problem with an electronic dictionary? d) How many types of paper dictionaries are there?

English was first written down in the 6th century. At that time, writers had to use the 23 letters of the Latin alphabet to write down what they heard. Because English has sounds that do not exist in Latin, they added letters to represent the 44 sounds of English. This resulted in some irregular spelling. After 1066, French became the language spoken by the king and other people in positions of power and influence. Many French words were introduced and the spelling of many English words changed to follow French patterns. The result was a rich and irregular mix of spellings.

The printing press was invented in the 15th century. Many early printers of English texts spoke other first languages, especially Dutch. They often paid little attention to how English words were spelled. Sometimes technical decisions were made to give columns of print straight edges. To do this, letters were removed from the ends of words and sometimes added to words. With time, people became used to seeing words spelled in the same way. Fixed spellings were therefore created by printers' decisions. Spoken English, however, was not fixed. It continued to change, as it still does. It is no wonder that English spelling seems irregular. Words such as although, through and cough, for example, all have the same spelling at the end, but are pronounced differently. Words such as feet, eat and seize on the other hand, are spelled differently but have the same sound in the middle.

60. After the invention of the printing press, many Dutch printers printed English text. True False
61. The author refers to a number of words to show the structure of words. True False
62. The word "This" (line3) refers to: a) Latin b) English c) adding letters d) having letters
63. People had trouble using the English writing system because it _____
- a) used some irregular spellings b) was influenced by French
- c) had only twenty-three sounds d) was based on the Latin alphabet
