L) Reading Comprehension (2)

Art experts have to be very cautious when buying paintings because deception is quite common in the art world. Overpainting is just one of the many problems facing art museum directors who are responsible for buying and evaluating works of art, who also have to be on guard for the false use of famous artist's names , false copies, or even fragments of paintings sold as hole works of art. Overpainting , the most common problem , results from the fact that quite often older works of art have been extensively changed. When a painting is carefully restored or repaired according to the artists' original design, it is called "in painting" , but when the repairs change the work to make it more marketable or appear to be more valuable, it is " overpainting". Modern science , however, now aids the buyers of works of art . Ultra-violet light and X-ray machines can detect these alterations. Another form of deception but one that is less frequent_ is putting the name of a famous artist on an inferior painting , a practice which occurred quite frequently in 1920s and 1930s when the level of art scholarship was not very high in United States and American buyers were easily fooled by European art dealers. In addition to these forms of deception copies of famous paintings are somethings sold as original works of art because some of the old masters painted a popular scene several times if it sold well or their students would copy their better works to practice style and technique. Furthermore, there are dealers who have been known to halves or quarter a painting because it is much more profitable for them to sell four small paintings than one large one.

33. What is the main idea of this passage?

- a-Ultra-violet light and X-ray machines can detect the alterations made in painting.
- b-Deception in the art world and its different ways
- c-Directors being responsible for buying works of art.

34. What is the meaning of “ in painting” ?

- a-To paint something new in old paintings
- b-to change a painting to be more profitable
- c-to repair a painting according to the artists’ original design
- d- to paint a painting on a wall

35. In the 1920s and 1930s Americans were easily fooled by European art dealers because...

- a-they lacked enough art knowledge
- b-the level of dealers’ job was high in the US
- c-they did not care about the paintings being genuine
- d-they were foolish

36. The Underlined pronoun” It” in the last paragraph refers to the painting of...
